INTRODUCTION OF STUDY	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ALOPECIA can be broadly classified into cicatricial and non cicatricial alopecia. Non cicatricial alopecias are more common and a majority of conditions causing this types are male and female pattern hair loss, alopecia areata, telogen effluvium and trichotillomania. In cicatricial alopecia, there is significant inflammation that damage hair follicles permanently and lead to permanent hair loss. ALOPECIA IN FEMALES: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> Female pattern hair loss, Telogen effluvium and chronic telogen effluvium contribute for the majority of causes for diffuse alopecia. In telogen effluvium, the hair fall is abrupt, rapid with generalised shredding of normal telogen hairs. This occurs following a triggering event like high fever, parturition, major surgery etc. In female pattern hair loss, gradual diffuse loss of hair with thinning of hair in the region of central scalp or widening of central parting line with or without frontotemporal recession is noted. In chronic telogen effluvium, diffuse hair loss persists part in a 14-week rehabilitation, control group (n=40) received usual out patient care. After rehabilitation there were significant changes within the components of the SGRQ (12.3 for the score total) with a P value of <0.05. They observed a significant increase in 6MWD and a decrease of two points (from 6 to 4) was noted in the score of the active group's BODE index without any change in the control group. They concluded that an outpatient-based 14-week rehabilitation program significantly improved the quality of life and exercise capacity without any change in the pulmonary function in patients with moderate COPD, and there was also a large decrease in the risk of death in rehabilitated patients as measured using the BODE INDEX.
